

Reprint of the Chess Reader

The reprint of the Chess Reader had also been initiated before our foundation, consequently the first printing of 100 copies by the “Publishing House Moravian Chess” could already be delivered a short time after our foundation event. So our members will be delighted to get a copy prior to this year’s Christmas, all the more as it represents a gift of our present chairman Jurgen Stigter to the founding members. Therefore – surely in the name of all members – heartfelt thanks to him!

We owe further thanks to Tony Gillam who as the copyright owner agreed to the project, as well as to Vlastimil Fiala for willingly undertaking the printing and for the rapid publication.

As an introduction to the Chess Reader we would like to provide you with some quotations and information:

Tony Gillam in his obituary of Ken Whyld:

„At this time (the 1950s), Ken was busily collecting chess books. He began a magazine (Chess Reader, 1955-63) devoted to reviewing new chess books and during its lifetime he wrote over 500 reviews. This was not only a clever way of getting free copies but it gave him an outlet for his writing skills. This magazine is now completely unobtainable, even on the secondhand market, which is a great shame as it means that Ken’s beautifully crafted reviews are also unavailable.“

Excerpt from A Walk on the Whyld Side (reprinted from CHESS 11/1998, in: Sarah Hurst, Curse of Kirsan. Milford, 2002):

"Throughout the 1950s Whyld had also produced his own magazine, The Chess Reader. This was quite different from The Chess Student's Quarterly, being exclusively devoted to reviews and discussions of chess books, but it had the same effect of keeping the editor in touch with chess buffs around the world. Whyld was simply doing something he wanted – keeping a record of new chess publications and obtaining a few free review copies along the way. Long before the invention of the PC and desktop publishing software, he laboriously typeset the pages. "I typed everything out with dots to the end of the line to see how many spaces I had to leave, then I typed each page out again with right-hand justification." "

Foreword by Dr. Meindert Niemeijer (1902-1987) in CHESS READER Volume I, no. I:

"A magazine for chess bibliophiles is a "rara avis" in the chess world, but certainly there is a need for one since "Les cahiers de L'échiquier français" are no more issued. Therefore the intention to publish such a periodical in the English language deserves the support of all those who are interested in the secondary aspects of chess.

Only he who is not merely alive to the practical game but also to the history and the literature of the game of all games, will fully undergo the fascinating influence it exercises on humanity for many centuries.

May a great success be granted to Mr. K. Whyld to his new magazine.

Dr. M. Niemeijer."

EDITORIAL

It is nearly a year since I first had the idea of putting out a magazine devoted exclusively to the chess literature. The idea is not limited to playing only. It is now crystallized, and now the first number appears. This is the first editorial of a magazine to justify its existence for the periodical, appeal for criticism to correct the faults of the first number, and account of what the magazine will be like in the future.

recognize their duty and subscribe. Readers may like to be assured that the magazine will be in good hands. This issue contains a preface to the first number, but this will probably be less prominent in the future, as I think there are already sufficient reasons for the publication to be covered in the next issue. Whenever a magazine first appears, there is always a sense of novelty, and Chess Reader is no exception. Among the numerous features have had to be settled. However, I have some interesting articles prepared for future issues.

In addition to these features which I specifically present, I am commencing the regular inclusion in each issue of a list of all chess literature, in any language, published since the previous number. I may even give a supplementary list for the whole period since then. Other contributions are the advertisement of chess books, and the formation of chess clubs and chess groups. This latter idea has been tried before, but I do not know how successful it was. The idea is that a group of chess players agree that each one will buy a magazine next from the next issue, and contribute to the cost of the next issue.

EDITORIAL

With this issue the present run of "Chess Reader" has come to an end. The magazine will continue under the management of Dr. K. Whyld, 27 Falconer Green, Highgate, N.10, London, England. All subscriptions should now be sent to the above address. Most readers will know that the aim of the magazine has not been to make a profit, and consequently the rate of subscription has been low. To enable the new publisher to meet rising costs the subscription has been raised to £5.00 a year. Those who have paid for advance will be sent their issues for which they have paid, without further charge.

I shall continue to receive for "Chess Reader" for some time, but eventually as my chess library becomes reduced it will become less practical. I shall also finish a number of projects now in hand such as the third volume of the chess encyclopedia and some chess-related books. Please note that I have changed my own address to Dr. K. Whyld, 27 Falconer Green, Highgate, N.10, London, England. (Until April 1964 I shall be away for most of the time. This means that letters may be late for up to a month before they will be received.)

No. I

"Due to a fundamental change in my private life I shall be selling my own chess library over the next year or so. The books will be listed in a series of catalogues, of which this is the first. Each item number will be prefaced by a letter indicating group. When I no longer have the books, I shall know for the first time exactly what I did have ! ..."

Postscript

It turned out after completion of the reprint that a further issue of the Chess Reader (namely vol. VI, nos. 3-4, Febr. 1966) was published as a latecomer to vol. VI (nos. 1-2, Midsummer 1965). This one will also be reprinted and distributed to our founding members together with a further gift - on this point see our publications page 4.

A second impression of the Chess Reader including the a.m. additional issue is in preparation.

Reader has changed hands. Owing to a variety of other commitments, Richard Broadley has been compelled to relinquish his duties with the magazine. I am honoured to have been asked by The Chess Player to take over the Editorship and I hope to prove worthy of the confidence they have thus placed in me.

The difficulties mentioned by Mr. Broadley in his letter to subscribers are still with us - the reluctance of some publishers to submit new publications for review, and the thorny problem of cost. Every effort will be made to solve the former difficulty, but I regret that rising costs make it necessary to announce increased subscriptions for volume 7, as follows:

Normal subscription --- 7/- sterling (£1.00 U.S.)

For those wishing to receive the magazine by air mail --- 7 1/2/- sterling (£2.00 U.S.)

(Subscribers remitting by dollar check are respectfully asked to add 0.25c to cover bank tele-transfer charges.)

To an extent, the future of the "Chess Reader" lies with our subscribers. If you would nominate a friend or colleague to
